

Andy Singer

Naval Postgraduate School, Inman Chair for Intelligence

Rear Admiral, US Navy, Retired

Andrew Michael Singer began his Naval Career in 1977 after serving as a New Jersey Probation Officer. During his 31 years of service Andy enjoyed a distinguished career as a senior Naval Officer specializing in Information Warfare, Cyber Operations, Intelligence and Maritime Operations. His service included many key positions spanning all aspects of Intelligence, Joint Operations, Cyber Operations and Information Systems.

Achieving the rank of Rear Admiral he is regarded as a transformational leader, who revamped intelligence related training, metrics, manpower and operations for intelligence, emerging area of network warfare, open source and law enforcement; setting the model for Services and national agencies.

Serving as Surface Warfare then Information Warfare Officer his career spanned all operations and shore assignments. He served in the Navy's smallest (PHM-1) to largest (CV-41) warships, from Type Commander to Fleet Commander and Combatant Commander Staffs. He is known as a thought leader in evolutionary and revolutionary technologies and applications in information operations, intelligence, space and cyberspace domains. Proven specialties include Intelligence, Cyber Operations, Anti-Submarine Warfare, Electronic Warfare, Special Technical Operations, Personnel Management and Information Warfare.

Plank owner as Deputy Commander of Naval Network Warfare Command and last Commander of the Naval Security Group Command that included Marine Corps and Coast Guard elements of the National Security Agency. He was the first Information Warfare Officer to serve as US Pacific Command Director for Intelligence where he closed out his first career as the leader of the Navy's Information Warfare Community and all Pacific Command Intelligence Professionals. During this time the Joint Intelligence Operations Center Pacific was known for innovation in all aspects of Intelligence and marked by unique operational focus inclusive of all component needs.

Led development of Intelligence, Information Operations and Cyber initiatives while at Booz Allen Hamilton in 2009. He returned to Naval Service as a Senior Executive with the Office of Naval Intelligence and at the Naval Post Graduate School in February 2010.

Born in New Jersey as a son of a career Soldier he returned to New Jersey and graduated from Rutgers University. He later earned a M.S. from the National War College and attended many senior leadership and business executive courses.